

Type is a thing of constant interest to me. It is sometimes a serious and useful tool, employed to deliver a message, or give life to an idea.  At other times it is a plaything that affords personal amusement and recreation.  An interest in Type provides a broader knowledge of history, including the appreciation of such related arts as painting, architecture and literature — and even business and politics.  In short, Type can be a tool, a toy, and a teacher; it can provide a means of livelihood, a hobby for relaxation, an intellectual stimulant, and a spiritual satisfaction.  An interest in Type necessarily includes a zest for everyday life.
